THE GRANITE STATE.

The Sights as Seen by a Janesville Lady in: Old New Hampshire—A Description of the Mountain Scenery.

NORTH CONWAY, N. H., Aug. 22, 1878.

The mountain scenery from this point is pleasing beyond description. The Mt. Washington, White Horse Ledge, (so named from the figure of a white horse plainly seen in the ledge), and Cathedral Rocks, lie in front, on the right, in the distance. Mr. Kearsage, Bartlett and Satter's Snake Mountain. The reason of the name of the latter is quite obvious, and would seem to quench any desire we might have felt to explore the region. About nine o'clock, having previously arranged a drive for the forenoon, we start out. The road winds around, up hill and down, over rocks and through woods, and every where, wherever we turn we are enchanted with the view. We cross the Saw river, and soon come to another stream, or bed of a river, there being but little water, and are told this was the original bed of the river, which changed its course some years ago. From one point we see Mt. Washington, the summit however, for he persists in hiding his head under a thick mantle of cloud. Still he is very attractive even in this guise. Passing through a gate and up a steep hill we are soon at Diana's baths. There was something very wonderful to us in this. A small stream of water flows over a bed of solid rock. The water, which there is quite a volume of, is very spring, has worn the rocks smooth. A great number of basins some of them deep enough to be called wells, have been formed by the constant pouring of the water on to the rocks, and this is where Diana is supposed to take her morning bath.

Seeing ferns growing on the rocks near the fall, one of the party volunteered to get them. This proved quite an exciting feat, as the only way of accomplishing it was to creep on hands and knees across the slippery rocks, the penalty of a miscreep being a bath in this delightfully cool water.

The ferns being secured, we proceeded to explore. Some of the party preferred to follow the path, the others the scramble it proved to be. The water had not been accommodating in the choice of its channels, and they were often times too wide to be easily crossed. Trees, narrow and rocky boards formed the only bridges, but we escaped without getting more than one foot in the water.

From Diana's Baths we drove to Cathedral Rocks, a distance of about one mile. To describe these would be impossible. These perpendicular walls of rock extended 300 feet in height, and are partly covered with trees and moss. We were not aware we had reached the rocks until we were directly under them, and they were so much more grand than we had been led to think from a distant view, that we were quite overcome with surprise for a few moments.

Taking a foot path which leads through the woods, and up a rocky ascent, we found ourselves under an immense dome of rock. Under the dome was pulpit, rock, and scattered around were chairs and foot stools of rock which were quite welcome after the tedious climb. After procuring ferns and moss, of which there is a great variety, we returned to the carriage and drove to Echo Lake. This beautiful sheet of water lies at the foot of White Horse Ledge, and is very clear. To test the correctness of its name a party sang, "Roll Jordan Roll," and the cliffs sent the echo rolling back. We went back for dinner and spent the afternoon in rambling over the house, and in a visit to Champney's studio. The next morning we are up in time to take a short walk before breakfast. We are resolved to find the white horse this morning, and eagerly scan the cliff for the outlines of the noble animal. We are not disappointed, and the proprietor of the hotel comes to our relief, and looking at a certain place in the rocks, we see what we pronounce a perfect horse.

We are the people very much interested in our plans and very willing to offer suggestions as to the pleasantest drives. We finally decide on two to be taken during the day. The first is to be "around the square." The day is perfect, the finest for many days. The mountain air is bracing, and we are in high spirits. As the driver stops his horses on the top of a hill, we look far ahead of us, and see, what we have so much wished to see—the summit of Mt. Washington. The delightful haze which we have ever seen about it, owing to its distance from us, is there, but this only softens the outline, and does not in the least diminish its grandeur. We are loth to lose sight of it even for a moment; but our time is short and we must drive on. We see at one time Giant's Steps, which are three mountains, rising one above another, in the form of steps, and surely none but a giant could make use of them. This is at the left of Mt. Washington, and on the right we see Double Head, and Thorne Hill. Descending a very steep hill, and turning one corner of our squad, we came to the Intervale. This is the famous Intervale of North Conway, and we have our first view of the meadows and Mt. Washington. From here we go to Artist Falls, a most lovely spot in a summer's day. This place, unlike Diana's Baths, is cool and shady, the trees forming an arbor over the stream. The sun rarely penetrates their thick foliage, and the trees and rocks are covered with moss. The afternoon was spent in driving to Conway Corners, a distance of five miles. No particular points of interest were visited, but the drive afforded a succession of beautiful views. Returning we passed the Ledges, which we always hall with delight, they seem so grand when standing beneath them. To-morrow we leave for Bethlehem, going through the famous White Horse Ledge Notch.

BETHLEHEM, Aug. 26, 1878.

A party had fixed upon this day, providing the weather was favorable, to go through the Notch and ascend Mount Washington. The confusion which we heard in awaking, was a signal to us of fair weather, for it was the noise of the contractors preparing to set out on their journey. At 10 o'clock we left North Conway, not without regret, for we had spent many pleasant days here, and were charmed with the place.

The railroad is built on the sides of the mountain, and is from 85 to 100 feet above the valley. The road follows the shape of the mountains, which of course necessitates many curves. At times, when looking ahead, the engine and forward cars were not to be seen, and at one place, between two cliffs, the turn is so short as to have the appearance of a right angle. In many places the bed of the road is only wide enough to lay the track, and the project beyond that. At such places a person may look down 85 feet before seeing ground, and we feel almost as if suspended in air. On our way we crossed Frankenstein trestle, which is built across a deep gulch, at the base of Frankenstein cliff. It is 500 feet long and 55 feet high. Passengers are quite relieved when safely across the trestle, as it looks very frail although built entirely of iron. Passing this we have the finest view from any point in the mountains. It is the view of the famous Willey valley. We are far above the tops of the trees, and are looking down upon the valley which nestles at the foot of these grand mountains. So quiet and peaceful it seemed, we could scarcely realize it had been the scene of such a peaceful tragedy, the story of which is familiar to all who pass through the Notch. In 1825 a family by the name of Willey, moved into a house into the valley, and passed the ensuing winter there. Late in June, Mr. Willey saw a large mass of the mountain above them, sliding through the fog, toward their meadows. The slide moved to the very foot of the mountain, and spread itself across the road. He was greatly terrified at the sight, and resolved to move the family from the Notch, but on further consultation concluded that such an event was not likely to occur again, and it should be would be prepared. He then built a strong hut, further down the valley, to which they might fly for shelter if occasion required. In August, after a heavy rain, a slide came down the mountains, striking a rock 30 feet high, back of the house, and passing by without injuring it. It is supposed that the family, consisting of Mr. Willey, his wife, five children, and two hired men, were overtaken by the slide while endeavoring to reach the hut.

Nearing the cut we cross Willey creek bridge, which is 109 feet above the cut, which is a place where the rock was cut out for the railroad to pass through. The walls of the cut are probably 60 feet high. It is said that for three years as many men were employed as could conveniently work. This view is not satisfactory from the cars, as it is a work which one wants time to look at. We next pass Crawford's Fabians, and various other large hotels, and are soon at Bethlehem.

We decide to remain here several days, and to rest the remainder of the day. From the hotel we have a view of the Presidential range. Mt. Jefferson, Washington, Madison and Monroe. The Ammonoosuc a most beautiful river, flows in front of the hotel, and back of the river LaFayette, Hay Stack, and Twin Mountains. The next day at six o'clock we are off for the Flume, a ride of 21 miles. The road, of course, is over hilly country, but nowhere did we ever ride 21 miles over such smooth roads and with as little fatigue. The ride on any pleasant morning, before the dew is dried from off the leaves and grass, is delightful. But a drive over the Bethlehem hills, with the are so bracing as to be almost oppressive, through some of the most beautiful scenery in America, what can be said of it? Words can not express what we enjoyed that day, we can only wish for our friends the same drive.

The first place of interest stopped at was Echo Lake, a much larger lake than its nameake; a North Conway. It is almost entirely shut in by mountains. The wind being unfavorable we were unable to hear the echo. We were told there are seven distinct echoes, and contrary to all expectations, the last is heard as plainly as the first. A few minutes drive brings us to the Profile house. We have been riding through the woods the greater part of the way, but as we near the house we emerge from them, and the full grandeur of the scene bursts upon us. It is a sight that fills us with awe. We are completely shut in by mountains, and everything else seems small and insignificant compared with them. The Franconia Notch through which we are passing, the narrowest point being a short distance below Profile house, is formed by Madison and La Fayette ranges. La Fayette is a grand mountain. In height it is next to Washington. It seems a fitting thing that a man, to whom America owes so much, should be honored next to Washington, among the mountains. Passing Profile house we come to the Old Man of the Mountains, or Profile Rock. This perfect face is formed of three distinct ledges of rock, and is from 75 to 85 feet from the top of the chin to the point of the forehead. It is 1500 feet above Profile lake, which lies at the base of the cliff. This is a quiet sheet of water surrounded by mountains, and is often called Old Man's Lake. A rock in the lake in regard to the Old Man is, that he does not show his face, except from one point in the lake. Having passed that point we look in vain for any feature, which you recognize as his. We next come to Old Man's basin, an immense granite basin, 30 feet in diameter, and 15 feet deep. The water falls a distance of 30 feet into it, with a great roar. The color of the water is a beautiful dark green.

After a drive of five miles we leave our carriage and finish our sight seeing on foot. We find the people very much interested in our plans and very willing to offer suggestions as to the pleasantest drives. We finally decide on two to be taken during the day. The first is to be "around the square." The day is perfect, the finest for many days. The mountain air is bracing, and we are in high spirits. THE benefit I derive from its daily use is to my surprise. I have been suffering from catarrh of the bladder for over twelve years of untold suffering. I have tried every remedy known to man, but have found no relief. I have been

ASSEMBLY CONVENTIONS.

FIRST DISTRICT.
A Republican Convention of the First Assembly District of Rock County, composed of the towns of Appleton, Beloit, Center, Madison, New Plymouth, Spring Valley, Union, and the City of Janesville, is hereby called to meet at Footville, on Friday, the 27th day of September, 1878, at 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for member of Assembly. The town of Union will be entitled to four delegates; the balance of the towns and the wards of the City of Beloit two each.
Dated this 24th day of September, 1878.
O. C. ALCOCK,
O. C. JOHNSON,
I. S. HOBBS,
Committee.

THIRD DISTRICT.
The Third Assembly District Convention, of Rock County, comprising the towns of Bradford, Clinton, Fulton, Harmony, Johnston, La Prairie, Lima, Milton, Porter, and Turtle, will meet at the Court House, in the City of Janesville, on Thursday, the 26th, of September, at two o'clock p. m., to nominate a candidate for the Assembly, in said district, and transact any other business which may properly come before the Convention.
As per resolution adopted at the Assembly Convention of August 10th, 1878, the several towns will be entitled to the same number of delegates as in the County Convention, viz: Clinton, Milton, and Fulton, four each; Porter, Lima, Johnston, Harmony, La Prairie, Bradford, and Turtle, two each.
By Order of Committee.

Riddled with Bullets.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

A vigilance committee, composed of from 60 to 100 men, each armed to the teeth, took possession of Versailles, Ind., on Monday night, and compelled all the inhabitants to take off their hats, while with crowbars they forced an entrance into the jail in which Tom Boyd, who assaulted Miss Stevens' last spring was confined.
The jail room occupied by him and two other prisoners committed for larceny, is about sixteen feet square. It is low and dingy, and is enclosed by a stone wall eighteen inches by two feet thick. As Boyd was aroused, he sprang to the middle of the room, entirely naked. When the first blow was struck on the door, he exclaimed, "What do you want?"
"We want Tom Boyd," was the response.
Then said Boyd, pretending to recognize a man's voice from Monroe's lips:
"Stone King, what do you want of me?" The reply was: "We'll show you in a minute."
Boyd then tried to stop their entrance with a piece of timber braced against the door, but, frightened away or thinking himself unequal to the task, he again went to the middle of the room, and there he saw a hand for a fight with his fists.
His tremendous muscle he evidently thought would not go for naught, even in an unequal contest with powder and ball.
While this scene was in progress some one from the outside was heard to say, "Shoot." The answer from the men at the door was, "I can't yet." Then in an instant later they were in the inside. "Put down your hands," muttered one of the blackened vigilantes. Boyd complied with the order and then the fusillade was begun.
The first shot took effect under his right arm and whirled his form slightly, offering his breast as a target for a revolver.
A revolver was put to his breast and in the discharge the skin of the victim was badly powder-marked. Two shots followed the first in quick succession, and two more balls entered Boyd, one immediately above and one immediately below the left nipple.
He still continued to whirl, finally bringing up against the stone wall, his blood spouting from every wound. Here he gradually sank upon his hands and knees, and here his maddened assailants followed, continuing to fire. On his hands and knees, with two balls through his heart, and unable to gasp a cry for mercy, he was still a target for the avengers. Two more balls lodged in his head, and still another and another entered his body, until fifteen bullets told of the unerring aim of the marksmen, who stood an arm's length away.

A Woman in Captivity.

From the Eau Claire Free Press.

A story comes to us from the up-river country which rather savors of romance.
We have it from a pretty good authority, and give it as we got it, something as follows: At the town of Big Bend, about forty-five miles above this place, on the Chippewa, there is to be found quite a settlement, with a goodly sprinkling of women. Among the number was a family by the name of LaPoint. One afternoon, about four weeks ago, Mrs. LaPoint went out into the woods to pick berries. The surrounding country is very hilly, wooded, low and swampy, and Mrs. LaPoint, losing her way, was unable to return home, and wandered about in the woods, without food or shelter, two days, until picked up by the Indians.
The Indians, Mrs. LaPoint recognized as those who had seen at the settlement on one or two occasions, the red men, in turn, remembering her, and promising to return her to her home, but leading her, instead, in an entirely opposite direction. As soon as Mrs. LaPoint was missed from home search was instituted, and the woods searched high and low, but no trace of her could be found until two weeks later, when a party in search came upon a band of Indians, in the vicinity of Lake Lake, who had her in their possession.
The Indians unhesitatingly turned her over to her friends, and Mrs. LaPoint was taken home, but refused, as did a number of other white women, to remain any longer in that vicinity, and is now living about two miles from the city.

PIANO-FORTE REPAIRING!

Mr. G. W. HERSEE.

Last week two children of Mr. John Ryan, of Great Neck, died. On Wednesday Mr. Ryan and his wife, Mr. Ryan's mother-in-law, both died. Mr. Ryan had buried several children from the house in which he died. A few days before his own death, while delirious, he said to his wife, "I have just seen Lizzy and Annie (two children who had lately died), and they said to me, 'We are coming after you, Kate, and will come for you soon.' Kate, who was then apparently in perfect health, was suddenly taken ill a day or two later, and died in a short time."

Dr. V. CLARENCE PRICE

—HAS—

Visited Janesville EIGHTEEN YEARS.

HAS met with unparalleled success in the treatment of all

Chronic Diseases

—OF THE—

THROAT, LUNGS, HEART, STOMACH, LIVER.

Head, nerve, kidney, bladder, womb, and blood affections of the urinary organs, scrofula, rheumatism, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, etc.

Dr. Price's reputation has been acquired by practice, honest dealing and years of successful practice.

My practice not one of experiment, but founded on the laws of Nature, with years of experience and evidence to sustain it, does not fear death, make sick to make well; no harsh treatment, no trifling, no flattery. We know the cause and the remedy needed; no guess work, but knowledge gained by years of experience in the treatment of chronic diseases exclusively; no encouragement without a prospect. Candid in our opinions, reasonable in our charges, claim not to know everything, or cure everybody, but do lay claim to reason and common sense, and to make investigations before they abandon hope, make interrogations and decide for ourselves. It will cost nothing as consultation is free. Visits made regularly.
